Manager Commentary

November saw the MSCI Emerging Markets Index (+4.1%) recover some of what it had lost during October. Asia (+5.2%) and EMEA (+4.5%) both improved, while Latin America (-2.2%) reversed part of the gains that the region had made during the previous month. Most sectors in emerging markets delivered positive returns. In particular, industrials (+5.9%) and consumer discretionary (+5.4%) both benefited from the 20% decline in the oil price, whereas this weighed on returns from the energy sector (-1.1%).

Indian agrochemicals producer UPL was the largest contributor to portfolio returns, having reported improving revenue growth at its most recent set of quarterly results. Latin American e-commerce company MercadoLibre gave some interesting insights into the development of its payments and logistics businesses, which we believe will support and enhance the long-term growth of its core e-commerce platform and potentially provide significant growth opportunities outside of the platform. Tencent, which is relatively new to the portfolio, saw its share price improve after a weak October.

The largest detractor was IT consultant Luxoft, which has struggled to grow primarily because of budget cuts at Deutsche Bank, one of its largest clients. Our Brazilian holdings, including car rental company Localiza, sold off as recent investor enthusiasm for Brazil waned. Online travel agent Ctrip caused some disappointment when it issued quarterly profit guidance that was below expectations, explained partly by economic challenges and partly by additional investment expenditures. We are encouraged by the ongoing growth opportunities for Ctrip as more travel-related purchases move online in China.
