Manager Commentary

The emerging markets index recorded its second consecutive month of negative returns, despite rallying briefly in the middle of March. Emerging EMEA was notably the weakest region, returning -4.9% in US dollar terms. Cyclically exposed sectors such as consumer discretionary, materials and financials were weaker while utilities, healthcare and consumer staples were more resilient.

Indian consumer services group Vkrangee was the largest contributor to performance, having been the biggest detractor for the previous two months. The shares recovered some of their recent losses during March but remain volatile. The company has recently appointed Grant Thornton to conduct a business quality audit and we think that this measure should help to improve investor confidence. The publication of audited fiscal year results, expected later in April, should also be an important milestone for the company. Another notable contributor to performance was Sinopharm, the leading Chinese drug distributor, which reported full year 2017 results that exceeded market expectations. We had added to the position during the fourth quarter following a period of weaker share price performance and a meeting with the company in Shanghai, which improved our confidence in the long-term investment case.

The largest detractor from performance during March was Dali Foods, the Chinese snacks and beverages company, which has been a notably strong performer for the Fund since its inception. Full year 2017 results were reasonable but market expectations were evidently high. The company continues to make good progress with newer product categories including energy drinks, soymilk and fresh-cut crisps while older product lines such as bread, snack cakes and peanut milk remain under pressure. We had taken some profits on the position during February. MercadoLibre was also weaker, following a period of very strong performance, which saw the share price exceed $400 for the first time in early March, more than double the price at the beginning of 2017. We had reduced our position somewhat during January.
