Manager Commentary

The fund is up 16.00% in Euro terms for 2017, outperforming the MSCI World Index by 858 basis points, with 47 bps lost in December.

The main contributors in December were Essilor, Tiffany and Novozymes. Essilor is the world's leading manufacturer and distributor of prescription lenses. In January 2017, the company announced a merger with Luxottica, a leading frames manufacturer and large optical retailer, to become a vertically integrated business. Since the announcement the companies have been seeking anti-trust approval, and clearance by the Canadian Competition Bureau in late November gave investors increased confidence that authorities in the US and Europe would follow suit. Tiffany rallied following better than expected third quarter results reported in late November, showing stabilisation in the US market and strong demand in Asia. Novozymes, a world leader in bio-innovation, producing a wide range of industrial enzymes, microorganisms and biopharmaceutical ingredients, strengthened as enthusiasm grows for its pipeline, particularly the new hygiene platform.

The main detractors in December were United Health, Moody's and Cognizant. United Health, the largest healthcare insurer and healthcare services company in the US, sold off in December following strong share price appreciation throughout most of 2017. A similar explanation can be attributed to Moody's share price weakness. Cognizant's large banking clients remain hesitant to commit to significant spending on digital transformation projects stalling an expected recovery in its revenue growth.

Strong organic revenue growth will help drive low double-digit earnings growth per annum over the next five years from the fund's portfolio of high quality growth companies.
